INTRODUCTION

Background Information

Concerned about irreplaceable resources and deteriorating conditions in Boston's seventeenth- and eighteenth-century burying grounds, representatives from the Boston Parks and Recreation Department, the Boston Landmarks Commission, the Boston Art Commission, the Massachusetts Historical Commission, and the Bostonian Society joined in a collaborative effort in 1983 to inventory Boston's fifteen historic burying grounds. The project was designed with three purposes:

- o to provide a planning tool for the Parks and Recreation Department, who owns and is responsible for maintaining the burying grounds;
- o to aid in the development of an outline for a master plan for conservation, landscaping, maintenance, structural engineering and other preservation issues;
- o to provide a record as a safeguard against vandalism and theft; and to provide public access to genealogical and other historical information recorded on the grave markers.

Past Accomplishments

In 1983, the Yankee Intern Program, which is jointly supported by the National Trust for Historic Preservation, and Yankee Publishing, Inc., awarded a summer internship to the Historic Burying Grounds project. The first year saw the completion of a stone-by-stone inventory in King's Chapel Burying Ground, a partial inventory of approximately 500 grave markers in Granary Burying Ground, research to uncover past conservation attempts, documentation of landscaping efforts and maintenance problems, and the compilation of an extensive bibliography. In 1984, the Bostonian Society retained the original intern as inventory supervisor, and another Yankee internship was awarded to the project to continue the inventory process in the South End's South Burying Ground, (established 1810) and the Phipps Street Burying Ground in Charlestown, (ca. 1630); in addition, the inventory of the remaining 1,900 grave markers in Granary Burying Ground was completed.

Present Accomplishments

The 1985 phase of the inventory project concentrated on the Eustis Street Burying Ground in Roxbury (established 1630, also called Eliot), and the Central Burying Ground (established 1754) on Boston Common. The project was supported by grants from the George B. Henderson Foundation Fund, and Franklin Federal Partners (via the Boston Redevelopment Authority).

The inventory project is now part of the Historic Burying Grounds Initiative, a public/private effort to preserve Boston's fifteen historic burying grounds through the development of a comprehensive master plan. The master plan will be completed in February 1986. Rehabilitation efforts have already begun in several burying grounds, and are expected to take at least 15 years and several million dollars.

The 1985 survey team consisted of the original intern as inventory supervisor (Rosanne Atwood-Humes), and four other team members, including a photographer. In addition to completing inventories at the two burying grounds, team members updated maps for Eustis Street and King's Chapel Burying Ground, and completed a photographic inventory at Eustis Street. The inventory at all burying grounds was conducted according to the methodology described below.

Methodology - The inventory process involves four steps:

1. Preliminary Research - A search of available historical documents is conducted to discover old maps, lists of inscriptions or tomb owners, previous inventories or preservation efforts. In addition, an up-to-date map of each burial ground is produced, if none exists, to record every grave marker's position, trees, pathways and other notable features.

2. Field Work - A numerical system for section and row divisions in each burying ground is developed which is super-imposed on the most recent map as the outline for the actual daily inventory. Then the information for each grave marker - genealogical, carving characteristics, and condition assessment - is transcribed onto inventory forms (see Appendix I). Photographs can be attached to the completed forms to provide further contemporary documentation.

3. Evaluation - The data collected in the field is studied and historical information and visual observations are utilized to assign a composite artistic/historical significance rating of I through V for each grave marker, (see below).

4. Data Access Management - The collected data is indexed and organized to facilitate access, with cross-referencing to the map. In addition, a report is produced for each burying ground which contains a historical summary and bibliography, details on existing conditions, and priorities for conservation, maintenance, interpretative signage, landscaping considerations, and so forth.

Evaluation Rating for Individual Grave Markers

For planning purposes each grave marker is assigned a composite evaluation taking into account: historical significance; artistic significance; degree of artistic integrity; and contribution to its setting. The evaluation ratings are expressed, see categories below, to indicate specific recommended preservation activities including: material conservation; educational interpretation; and landscape improvements.

I. Highest Significance - Grave markers in Group I. are considered to have national or exceptional significance:

as burial markers associated with persons or events significant in American history, particularly of the 17th and 18th centuries;

as the highest quality artistic works of specific craftsmen working in Boston which possess artistic integrity (of embellishments and inscription and generally of form);

as unique or exceptional examples of particular burial marker styles or types that are early or became national prototypes, or that are rare throughout the nation.

Grave markers in Group I. have urgent priority status for the following preservation efforts: individual artistic or historic significance for interpretive or educational materials including signage; stone and other material conservation beyond the level of simple cleaning (see Condition on inventory forms); specific landscape improvements (see Master Plan and also Remarks on inventory forms). The further designation of "R" denotes Group I stones that are potential candidates for removal to an indoor location and replacement on site with a casting, (a very small number of gravestones, perhaps as few as ten (10) city-wide).

II. Major Significance - Grave markers in Group II. are considered to have the highest significance to Boston, the Commonwealth, or New England:

as the city's most outstanding examples of their style or type, distinguished for artistic quality and artistic integrity (wholeness of the carved embellishments and inscription and generally of form);

as memorial art and/or possessing inscriptions honoring persons or events (such as battles, epidemics, or waves of immigration) of important regional or local historical significance;

as early or rare examples of the use of a particular style or type in Boston, the Commonwealth, or New England;

as the best examples of the work of known Boston or New England craftsmen;

as grave markers that are focal points in their landscape setting (particularly monuments).

Grave markers in Group II. have immediate priority status for preservation activities including: individual or general educational interpretation; stone or other material conservation beyond the level of simple cleaning (see Condition on inventory forms); specific landscape improvements (see Remarks on inventory forms and also see Master Plan).

III. Significant - Grave markers in Group III. are considered to be of significance to the city of Boston:

as possessing strong historical associations with important Boston persons or events;

as fine representative examples of the work of local craftsmen or of a particular style of grave marker;

Grave markers in Group III. have general consideration and near future priority for preservation activities including: mention on collective interpretive signage; and general improvements in a burying ground such as simple cleaning and/or resetting.

IV. Notable - Grave markers in Group IV. are considered to make some contribution to the overall character of their setting:

as sharing general features with surrounding markers such as scale, style, materials or type;

as possessing some interest artistically or historically.

Grave markers in this category have general consideration for collective stabilization and preservation activities within a burying ground such as simple cleaning and/or resetting (see Condition on inventory forms).

V. Minor or Non-Contributing - Grave markers in Group V. are considered to be out of character with their setting due to incompatibility in materials, scale, style or type (such as a mid 20th-century grave marker, low and wide in form and carved in polished red granite, set among mostly 17th- and 18th-century slate markers).

Group V. markers have long-term priority for general and collective preservation activities in a particular burying ground.

EUSTIS STREET BURYING GROUND

Introduction

The survey at the Eustis Street (also called Eliot) Burying Ground began July 8 and ended July 18, 1985, and included: a complete stone-by-stone inventory of all gravestones, tombs and other grave markers within the burying ground; a photographic inventory to record the grave markers, with a print mounted on each corresponding form; and a revised tracing of the City Engineer's 1900 record plan, not to scale. The forms for each gravestone or tomb were numbered according to an existing card file for an inventory done around 1900 which corresponds to numbers on the old plan (scale of record plan 1" = 8'0").

The record plan was fairly accurate for headstone locations, but most of the footstones had not been included in the 1900 inventory and needed to be added to the revised plan and numbered according either to their placement - i.e., if the nearest headstone was number 250, the closest footstone was numbered 250a - or, according to the matching headstone. For example, if a footstone inscribed "J. D. 1750" was found in the vicinity of a headstone numbered 231 and inscribed "James Dean Died April 24, 1750", the footstone was assigned 231a rather than the number of the closest headstone. However, matching was done only when the foot and headstones were within close range.

There may be a few footstones scattered about the burying ground that have not yet been matched up with their respective headstones. One other low-priority task remains for future completion: development of an updated scale map of the burying ground to replace the not-to-scale corrected tracing.

Physical Development

The burying ground is located at the busy intersection of Washington Street and Eustis Street, one block from Dudley Square in Roxbury. The elevated Orange Line railway along Washington Street currently provides a noisy backdrop to the eternal resting-place of Roxbury's town fathers; its removal is planned for 1986. A low mound in shape, the burying ground's area in 1900 was 34,630 square feet, or approximately three-quarters of an acre. A seven-foot retaining wall topped by an iron fence bulges out over the sidewalk. A single entrance gate, (which is extremely difficult to open), opens directly from the sidewalk; five steps lead into the burying ground. A bronze commemorative plaque was mounted on the gate in 1882 (see Supplemental Information). Several dilapidated structures abut the burying ground, and there are boarded-up buildings and vacant lots in the immediate vicinity.

The burying ground is nearly invisible from the street, due to the height of the retaining wall that borders the sidewalk. In addition, rampant weed tree growth, especially sumac, creates blind spots within the burying ground, obscures gravestones and blocks the existing path.

Seventeenth Century - Eustis Street Burying Ground was established in 1630 just months after the founding of the Town of Roxbury. The burying ground was first mentioned in Roxbury town records prior to 1641; and, according to Drake's 1878 history of Roxbury, the first interment took place in 1633. Eustis Street is one of the three oldest burying grounds in Boston; the other two are King's Chapel Burying Ground (1630) and Phipps Street Burying Ground in Charlestown (ca. 1630). The Town of Roxbury was connected to Boston only by a narrow strip of land flanked by tidewater marshland called the "Neck", on which Roxbury Street ran (now Washington Street). The burying ground site at the junction of Roxbury Street and "the Way to Dorchester" (Eustis Street) represents the center of Roxbury's original farming village.

Eighteenth Century - For its first one hundred and sixty years, the burying ground was also utilized as pasturage for grazing animals and was not over-crowded until 1725, when Colonel Joshua Lamb donated a quarter of an acre of land at the northwestern corner to enlarge the burying ground, reserving the right to the "herbage thereof" (Drake, p. 97). The area around the burying ground remained placidly rural until after the Revolutionary War. During the Siege of Boston (1775-76), fortifications were constructed next to the burying ground blocking Roxbury Neck, to defend the town of Roxbury from British invasion; the buildings along Roxbury Street in the immediate vicinity of the burying ground were levelled. In the last quarter of the eighteenth century, industrialization in the town of Roxbury began to affect the burying ground. Merchants' residences and commercial buildings were constructed on the property abutting the north- and southeastern boundaries of the burying ground, including a tavern and indoor bowling alley known as the "Ball and Pin", constructed by Jesse Doggett around 1787. The Town surveyed the burying ground in 1785 to settle a boundary dispute with an abutter; the ground's area at that time was three-quarters of an acre plus twenty-eight rods. In 1794, the town selectmen voted that the burying ground would no longer be "fed with Creatures" (May, p. 46) and that the fence surrounding the site should be repaired. A canal connecting Boston Harbor to Roxbury was begun about 1795, which fostered development around the burying ground. Fifty feet in width, the canal followed an old creek along what is now Harrison Avenue to end at Eustis Street just east of the burying ground. Canal proprietors purchased part of the southern end of the burying ground to build wharves and a warehouse at the head of the canal.

Nineteenth Century - By 1815, a soap manufactory, a candle-making shop, and a bakery were located on the site adjacent to the burying ground; by 1842, a morocco leather tannery abutted the northeastern side of the burying ground; this building was replaced around 1868 by the existing brick factory building, erected by Owen Nawn. On the southeastern side, another portion of the burying ground was taken in 1829, to erect a fire house next to the canal. This wooden building was replaced in 1859 with the present brick structure, which was in use to 1916 and is the oldest extant fire station in the city. Excavations for the fire house's foundation uncovered human remains, indicating that part of the old fire house had been built over a portion of the burying ground. On a map completed in 1844 the area of the burying ground is given as three quarters of an acre plus 2 rods. Another encroachment came in 1856, when a narrow strip of land eight to nine feet in width was taken from the burying ground to widen the intersection of Eustis and Washington Streets. In 1871, three years after Roxbury was annexed, the City of Boston sold 1,818 square feet from the southerly part of the burying ground to an abutter, L. D. Davenport. The next year, Davenport leased from the city an additional 200 square feet of burying ground land behind the fire house to construct a small office building.

Gravestones, Tombs and Monuments - In 1872, a Mr. Henry A. May recorded the inscriptions from all the gravestones at Eustis Street. May's list was published alphabetically in the 1903 Annual Report of the Cemetery Department, which noted that about fifty of those stones had since disappeared, and that twelve stones not visible in 1872 had been uncovered in contemporary landscaping efforts. These additional gravestones were not found in the burying ground by the 1985 inventory team. The earliest headstone, that of the first child of Reverend Samuel Danforth, dates from 1653. The only gravestone in the burying ground which bears a coat-of-arms is the Grosvenor headstone dated 1691. The most widely-used material for the nearly 700 stones is slate; many of the earliest markers are of greenstone. There are a few markers of white marble, though this material and a brown sandstone were used more often for tombs and monuments. There are only three monuments: two marble vertical markers and a granite boulder, missing its bronze inscription tablet, that was erected by the Sons of the American Revolution in 1902 to honor Brig. Gen. Greeton.

The burying ground contains 35 tombs - the earliest of these is the Dudley Tomb built by stonemasons Sharp and Wilson before 1653. The John Peirpont tomb of 1682 and the Parish or Eliot tomb of 1687 are the next oldest tombs. These three are grouped along with the other seven oldest tombs in the center of the burying ground. There are ten underground tombs bordering the north side of the site, another four on the east, nine on the south, and two on the west. Some tombs not marked by horizontal table-top structures are indicated by upright slate markers. Many tombs are not marked and can only be located on the record plan. Interments ceased in 1846, except in family tombs.

Landscaping - The retaining wall of Roxbury puddingstone with its granite block capping was erected when Eustis Street was widened in 1856; in addition, an ornate iron gate was installed at the entrance; the ground was graded and sodded; gravelled pathways were laid out; a variety of trees planted, including many evergreens; gravestones reset and broken monuments repaired; and the dilapidated and abandoned tombs removed or filled in. This mid-nineteenth-century overhaul of the Eustis Street Burying Ground was part of a city-wide drive to "improve" the old graveyards and make them more picturesque. One contemporary historian bemoaned the plain and "unattractive" old burying grounds (Drake 1878, p. 96). During this period, most of the old graveyards in Boston were contemporized; their gravestones were rearranged into neat patterns, meandering path systems were laid out, and ornamental trees and shrubs were planted to relieve the severe look of the stark-skulled slate stones.

In November, 1903, another campaign of landscaping improvements began. The grounds were graded and seeded. Twenty trees were cut down and a dozen gravestones were discovered in their roots. Leaning gravestones were reset; and the front entrance gate was altered with five steps built into the burying ground. (see photos, Annual Report) The existing iron fence atop the retaining wall was installed some time after 1903. The existing configuration of the gravestones matches closely the 1900 record plan, excepting the footstones, many of which were not recorded at that time. It appears that a rearrangement of the gravestones was accomplished prior to this time period. In this respect, Eustis Street is more fortunate than many of the other graveyards in Boston, which have been rearranged many times over the years. However, due to the fragile nature of these markers, damage and losses have occurred, whether through vandalism, weathering or untrained maintenance.

Conservation - Efforts to establish a memorial park and interpretative museum for the burying ground and the surrounding historic buildings, begun as early as 1893, were revived in 1977 as a pilot program of Boston 350, an urban education and conservation program. This model restoration/preservation project utilized student workers employed by the Youth Conservation Corps to clean and map the burying ground in 1978. Archaeological investigation and structural analysis on the building sites abutting the burying ground were also completed. In 1979, students repointed the retaining wall. Details regarding the project can be found in a study called Boston 350: A Preservation Strategy, prepared by Ann M. Beha Associates in February, 1979.

The 1985 inventory project represents the most recent preservation efforts in Eustis Street Burying Ground, and is part of the Historic Burying Ground Initiative, a public/private partnership administered by the Parks and Recreation Department and the Landmarks Commission, City of Boston. A master plan including recommendations for comprehensive rehabilitation and preservation of the Eliot Burying Ground will be available in February 1986.

Historic Significance

Some of New England's most distinguished spiritual, political, and military leaders are buried in Eustis Street. Reverend John Eliot (1604-1690), known as the Apostle to the Indians and from whom the burying ground got its historical name, is buried in the parish tomb of the First Church of Roxbury. Rev. Eliot translated the Bible into the Indian language and established Praying towns among the tribes of New England. Reverend Samuel Danforth (d. 1674), who assisted Rev. Eliot in leading the Roxbury parish from 1650-74, was buried in the Dudley family tomb. This tomb, located at the highest point in the burying ground, holds the remains of two governors of Massachusetts, Thomas (1576-1652) and Joseph Dudley (1647-1720), Chief Justice Paul Dudley (1675-1751), and Col. William Dudley (1686-1743). The tomb's sandstone slab contains a shallow oval-shaped depression that once held an insert of white marble inscribed with the family name. Reputedly, the original pewter inscription plate was removed during the Siege to manufacture bullets. Another New England notable, Robert Calef (d. 1719), played a prominent role in the New England witch hunts; his 1700 book "More Wonders of the Invisible World", refuted the claims of Reverend Cotton Mather. Other notables buried at Eustis include members of the Willard Family, well-known clockmakers; Brigadier General John Groaton (1741-1784); members of the Warren family, including Joseph, the father of Revolutionary War hero General Joseph Warren, (the remains now rest at Forest Hills); Jesse Doggett, tavernkeeper of the "Ball and Pin"; and Josiah Cunningham, owner of the candle-making shop adjacent to the burying ground.

Artistic Significance

The gravestones in Eustis Street range in date from 1653 to 1849, and represent a wide range of carving styles for that time span. The earliest gravestones are carved without decorative embellishment, and they simply record name, age and death date. Later gravestones are carved with winged skulls, crossed bones, and grave-digging tools, grim symbols of mortality. The increasing sophistication of life in colonial America is reflected by changes in headstone iconography: serene cherub faces appear around the 1730's, then, after the Revolution, classical motifs such as the urn and willow, together with flowery epitaphs and poetry, predominate. These changes mark a turning away from the severe contemplation and familiarity with death characteristic of the previous century, and are clearly documented in the gravestones in Eustis Street Burying Ground.

Recommendations

Seemingly neglected and forgotten, the burying ground is easy prey to vandalism and other unsavory activities. Protecting the gravestones at Eustis Street from vandalism and theft is a complex task, not accomplished simply by keeping the gate locked. More frequent maintenance will help provide a cared-for appearance to offset the aspect of neglect which now exists, in addition to the added deterrence of the regular presence of maintenance personnel. This recommendation will be included in the master plan.

Preservation activities in this burying ground will take into account its relationship to the surrounding site as well as the community in which it is located. The Department of Environmental Management of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts has designated a Roxbury Heritage State Park site adjacent to Eustis Street Burying Ground. Plans call for interpretation of the burying ground as part of the Park's exhibit. State and City agencies have also targetted reconstruction of the Washington Street puddingstone retaining wall as a public safety priority. Refer to the master plan for specific preservation and maintenance recommendations. Neighborhood efforts to continue activities such as well-publicized walking tours of the burying ground and the abutting buildings, and clean-up days, will go a long way in enhancing the positive identity of the site in the community.

CENTRAL BURYING GROUND

Introduction

The survey at Central Burying Ground began July 19, 1985 and ended July 26, 1985, and included: completed inventory forms for all 487 gravestones, tombs, or tomb markers; field corrections to the City Engineer's record plan of 1900 (not to scale); historical record research; and compilation of a bibliography. At Central, the existing record plan dating from 1900 depicts the gravestones numbered consecutively, possibly corresponding to an inventory done at around the same time which is no longer extant. For the purposes of the 1985 survey, not knowing if the 1900 map locations still applied, the gravestones in Central were divided into three sections: A, B and C, and were inventoried and numbered based on present position within the burying ground. The tomb numbers were assigned according to the number carved on each marker, whether free-standing or mounted or carved on the perimeter wall at each tomb's location, and are indicated by a "T" in the location/reference number, i.e., C/T-23. The 1900 map proved to be fairly accurate for headstone locations, and was marked to indicate the present positions of footstones, tomb markers and other grave markers.

At the completion of the 1985 phase of the Historic Burying Grounds Inventory Project, there remain two low-priority tasks:

Producing a new to-scale map to record the graveyards' (1985) configuration, preferably drawn to the same scale as the historic record plan - 1" = 8'0".

Continuing research on tomb ownership for fund-raising and genealogical purposes, using material from Mount Hope Cemetery records.

Physical Development

Central Burying Ground is located downtown, within the Boston Common, on the Boylston Street side between Tremont and Charles Streets. It covers nearly one-and-one-half acres.

In 1756, after sixteen years of petitions and discussions by Boston city fathers, the burying ground was deemed "fit to bury the dead in", and became the fourth burying ground in Boston. Central was established to help relieve overcrowded conditions in Boston's older graveyards: King's Chapel, Granary and Copp's Hill. The original two-acre burying ground was bounded on the east by the land of Mrs. Martha Allen, on the south by Frog Lane (now Boylston Street), on the west by the Common training field, and on the north by the Common. Central was called the South Burying Ground until 1810, when another burying ground opened in the new South End of Boston and was given that name. The older burying ground was renamed according to its central location on the Common.

Gravestone Configuration - During the nineteenth century, a drive to "improve" the old burying grounds in Boston included installing path systems, planting ornamental shrubbery, and repositioning gravestones into easily-mowed rows. In 1830, and again in 1840, a number of trees and shrubs were planted in Central to impart a "handsome appearance to the premises" (Shurtleff, p. 239). However, there is no indication that the gravestones in Central have been rearranged as have grave markers in many of the other historic burying grounds in Boston. Central has no path system, and the headstones and footstones retain their original positions - facing west and east and paired as the head and footboards of a bedstead. The 1985 configuration matches the 1900 record plan closely; the gravestones' positions have remained unchanged for at least the past 85 years. Gravestones and the remains of over 1,100 human bodies were uncovered during excavation work on Boylston Street for the subway in 1895. These discoveries establish the original southern boundary of the burying ground as extending into the middle of Boylston Street. The remains were reinterred in a mass grave in the northwest corner of the burying ground that same year.

There are a total of 487 headstones and footstones in Central, mostly slate, with a few sandstone and marble. The gravestones range in date from 1749 (C/B-148) to 1957 (Walter Monahan, C/T-133). The overwhelming majority date from between 1790 and 1810. In 1907, there were 362 gravestones, probably counting only headstones, of which 323 were slate, 34 marble and 5 sandstone.

Tomb Construction - Two early histories disagree about the earliest date of tomb construction in the burying ground: Odgen Codman's 1917 history of Central Burying Ground cites the first tomb as that of Benjamin Bass in 1771; according to Shurtleff's History of Boston, written in 1890, the first tomb was constructed in 1793 by John Just Geyer, stone-cutter, for one Mr. Seaver. By 1803, there were 149 tombs erected around the four sides of the burying ground, many by the masons, John and Nicholas Pierce. That same year, a ten-foot brick wall was constructed along the Boylston Street boundary, with slate tablets inserted bearing the name and number of tomb owners. The burying ground retained this configuration until 1836. Then public improvements to the Common, including an iron fence around the Common's perimeter and a pedestrian mall constructed along a newly widened Boylston Street, resulted in the removal of the brick wall, and the reduction of the burying ground to its present size of 60,630 square feet. Sixty-nine tombs in two rows parallel to the street were covered by the Boylston Street Mall. The City built sixty new granite tombs to replace those being discontinued, creating a hollow called the "Dell" on the western side of the burying ground. Owners of the discontinued tombs either purchased new tombs, or removed their forebears' remains to Mount Auburn Cemetery in Cambridge.

Although all 140 nineteenth-century tomb structures still exist, there are only 95 tomb markers still extant; some have been moved from their original positions. In many instances, to locate underground tombs, one must consult the 1900 record plan. Most of the tombs are either located underground along the perimeter wall or are part of the free-standing granite tomb structure in the "Dell". There are several sandstone tomb doorways on the north retaining wall in the Dell, a marble table tomb located to the right of the entrance gate, and a marble obelisk tomb marker.

Present Conditions - Today, the Central Burying Ground is trapezoidal in shape, covers 60,693 square feet, and is enclosed by a recently installed iron fence atop a low cement wall. The Deer Park maintenance facility has replaced Mrs. Martha Allen as an eastern abutter, otherwise, the paths of the Boston Common and the Boylston Street Mall still border the burying ground as in the nineteenth century. The character of Central Burying Ground has not changed drastically since the widening of Boylston Street in 1836. There are no paths, benches, lights, or trash barrels within the ground. There are many healthy trees, including lindens, oaks and chestnuts. The grass is also healthy and neat, aside from some weed growth around the edges (especially rampant in the Dell area). The iron fence is similar in scale to the nineteenth-century fence recorded in historical photographs. However, the concrete footing for the fence was poured over the old granite-block wall, and, in several locations, has obscured the tomb location information inscribed on the wall. There are three entrance gates, all on Boylston Street; two open into the Dell tomb area and the main gate is located near the Deer Park driveway. A temporary picket fence isolates the Dell area from the rest of the burying ground. Due to structural problems, the Dell's tombs have been deemed unsafe. In several spots, the granite-block facings have separated from the brick structure comprising the tombs, or have collapsed, allowing an entryway into the tombs.

Historic Significance

Tradition asserts that British soldiers who died of disease during the Siege of Boston, as well as American patriots who died of wounds received at the Battle of Bunker Hill in 1775, were buried in mass graves in the burying ground. Records indicate that a number of Revolutionary War soldiers and officers are buried in the tombs and graves of Central; there are also at least a dozen participants in the Boston Tea Party interred in the burying ground, (see Supplementary Information). The inscriptions on the gravestones chronicle the burial of Roman Catholics, "strangers" from outside Boston, citizens of foreign countries (such as China), and Freemasons. A 1975 granite replica of an 1898 marker memorializes the final resting place of Gilbert Stuart (1755-1828), painter of George Washington's famous portrait; a plaque mounted on the perimeter fence commemorates William Billings (1746-1800), Boston-born and America's first composer. Both are interred within the burying ground, but the exact sites are unknown. The 1805 gravestone for locally famous restaurateur M. Jean-Baptiste Gilbert Payplat dis Julien, owner of a restaurant at Milk and Congress Streets, was recorded in Codman's history of 1917, but is no longer located within the burying ground. The oldest gravestone found in the burying ground is a fragment dated 1749, seven years before the ground was established; the next oldest is that of Elizabeth Ransted, dated 1755, still prior to the graveyard's establishment. The earliest gravestone original to the site is Benjamin Frobisher's, dated 1761.

Artistic Significance

Most of the decoratively carved gravestones in Central Burying Ground were produced within a narrow range of dates, between 1790 and 1810, and represent the neoclassical style of gravestone carving popular in that period. Most of the markers display some variation of the urn and willow motif and incorporate a surprising degree of imagination and creativity. There are several unusual allegories of death and its effect on loved ones left behind. The burying ground is significant for its high degree of intactness and for the range of carving variations within a theme.

Recommendations

A detailed engineering report, including a study of possible restorative repairs to the tomb structure in the Dell, is included in the Historic Burying Grounds Interim Planning Study of 1985. A landscaping study of Central is also included. Practically every gravestone within Central is in need of cleaning, as the heavy traffic of downtown Boston has contributed a thick encrustation of black dirt which obliterates the decorative carving and inscriptions. In addition to a program of simple cleaning, the grave markers in this burying ground should be examined by professional conservators to establish priorities for mending broken stones, to stabilize exfoliated markers, and to address other conservation issues.

Other major recommendations for Central Burying Ground include: trash barrels installed by the entry gates; regularly scheduled maintenance, including tree branch pruning, especially for the lindens; informational signage illuminating historical data, and posted use regulations such as no rubbings, no picknicking, and no dog-walking. Since the burying ground has retained its original configuration over the years, the introduction of a path system would be historically inaccurate and, because the burying ground is not heavily visited by tourists, unnecessary. Increased maintenance staff presence should also discourage use of the burying ground as a shelter by street people.

Appendix I. - Historic Burying Grounds Inventory Methodology

Methodology

The inventory process in historic burying grounds involves four steps:

1. Preliminary Research - A search of available historical documents is conducted to discover old maps, lists of inscriptions or tomb owners, previous inventories or preservation efforts. In addition, an up-to-date map of each burial ground is produced, if none exists, to record every grave marker's position, trees, pathways and other notable features.

2. Field Work

A numerical system for section and row divisions is developed which is super-imposed on the most recent map as the outline for the daily inventory.

Each grave marker provides information in several areas: genealogical and other historical data from the inscriptions, carving characteristics and artistic motifs, and condition assessment for conservation evaluation. This information is recorded on inventory forms (see below for specific inventory procedures). Photographs can be shot and attached to the forms after the inventory has been completed.

3. Evaluation - The data collected in the field is studied and historical information and visual observations are utilized to assign a composite artistic/historical significance rating of I through V for each grave marker. (see page 3)

4. Data Access Management - The collected data is indexed alphabetically and chronologically and organized to facilitate access, with the forms cross-referenced to the map by number. In addition, a report is produced for each burying ground which contains a historical summary and bibliography,, comments on existing conditions, and priorities for conservation, interpretative signage, maintenance needs, landscaping considerations, etc.

Description of Inventory Form

The inventory form was designed in 1983 specifically for Boston's burying grounds. The latest revision, in 1985, added an expanded and more specific version of the conditions section, but is essentially the same information arranged differently. At the top of the form, the location/reference number (example, KC/3A-#121) indicates the location of the grave marker recorded on the form. The first letters indicate the specific burying ground*, the numbers after the slash indicate the row, section and grave marker number. As up-to-date maps showing the precise locations of grave markers become available for the burying grounds, this number is transferred onto the maps to aid in finding particular markers and to keep track of losses (attrition). Pre-inventory mapping is invaluable in planning the most logical reference numbering system.

Record Date: All forms are stamped with the date the grave marker information was recorded.

Weather: One word description of weather conditions for that day.

Examined by: Initials of researcher.

Name of interred is used as a finding aid in the alphabetical index. If a marker lists several individuals, the uppermost is recorded as the primary name. Other secondary names will also be recorded in the index as cross-references.

Date: Inscribed decease date.

Motif: The various decorative carvings found on grave markers are listed on the form in approximate chronological order, i.e.:

Skull - 17th & 18th centuries

Face - 18th & 19th centuries

Urn/Willow - 19th century

None - Sometimes no motif was employed.

Other - Use this category to specify the motif employed, such as cross or coat-of-arms, or other variations.

The above motifs, referred to on the form as primary, are carved in the semi-circular uppermost part of the gravestone, called the tympanum. The secondary motif can be found above or below the most important image, or elsewhere on the gravestone.

* Location codes: BH - Bunker Hill, C - Central, CH - Copp's Hill, DN - Dorchester North, DS - Dorchester South, E - Eustis (Eliot), EB - East Boston, G - Granary, H/U - Hawes/Union, KC - King's Chapel, MS - Market Street, P - Phipps Street, SES - South End South, W - Westerly, WS - Walter Street.

Border: The carved decorative margin around the inscription.

Typical - 95% of the gravestones in Boston's burying grounds contain this particular border.

Elaborate - Rare, contains fruit and/or other fancy details that set it apart.

Simple - Curvilinear design etched around inscription

Plain - Single or double line framing the inscription.

Carving: Indicate the appropriate condition of the carved decoration and inscription.

Mint - Sharp, clear, inscription can be read easily;

Clear but worn - edges are rounded, not crisp;

Mostly decipherable - areas are discolored or gone, but most of inscription can be read;

Traces - some of the carving has disappeared, or is hard to read;

Type: Circle the appropriate abbreviation.

Headstone - The predominant type of grave marker, usually has a full inscription and decorative carving.

Footstone - Usually smaller than headstones, containing only initials or a name. Sometimes the year of death is also included.

Tomb - Either an above-ground or below-grade chamber with room for multiple burials, often marked with a horizontal slab on a base or at ground level.

Orientation: The researcher circles the appropriate direction the carving faces; if grave marker is horizontal, the direction it would face if propped upright. For tombs, the slab's axis is noted, i.e., N-S or E-W.

Dimensions: For width, measurement from side-to-side, height - ground level to highest point of grave marker, depth - the average thickness of stone or slab from front to back. Add other dimensions for tombs and monuments; for example, length, circumference, etc.

Bedding: Note whether bedding planes are parallel to or at an angle to the surface of the stone. Indicated by the symbol = or the symbol /.

Plot Description: The grave marker's immediate surroundings, i.e., grassy, bare, etc.

Inventory Form (cont'd) - Material

Material: Circle the appropriate abbreviation.

Slate - Most grave markers in the Boston burying grounds are slate, a smooth-grained stone with even "bedding planes", usually running parallel to the stone's face.

Granite - Granular-looking, with no discernible bedding planes. Generally grey with black, white, and pink flecks. monuments and tombs

Marble - White or grey-white, usually eroded, cool to the touch. monuments and tombs

Sandstone - Tan or reddish-brown, surface soft and grainy.

Other - Greenstone, a thick green-tinged stone, used for many seventeenth-century markers. Brick, concrete, metals, etc. are also recorded in this category.

Rating: Appropriate significance rating from I through V.

CONDITION: The terms used to record the damage for a particular grave marker are difficult to define with simple explanations. Field work gives one the experience necessary to recognize and record the specific categories. Observe and describe conditions only, do not interpret or make judgements regarding causes.

Soiling: Surface deposits of fine particulate matter, generally dark in color, modifying or obscuring the appearance of the stone.

Stains: Discoloration by deposition of minute deposits of highly colored matter within the pores of the stone.

Efflorescence: White crystalline surface deposits composed of water- soluble salts.

Graffiti: Discoloring markings, typically paint, ink, chalk or crayon, applied as an act of vandalism. (Also recorded in this category: damage associated with rubbing / casting activities).

Bio. Activ.: Presence of fungal or algal growth, mosses, vines, or bird droppings.

Erosion: Gradual loss of surface material resulting in rounded edges and profiles, and (often) an overall granular texture.

Blistering: Swelling and (often) rupturing of a uniformly thin layer of stone (cf. "Flaking").

Inventory Form (cont'd) - Condition

- Flaking: Detachment of a uniformly thin layer of stone.
- Scaling: Advanced loss of stone, of variable depth (cf. "Flaking").
- Delamination: Separation of relatively thick layers of stone along bedding planes. Early stages of delamination, appearing only as fissures along the top edge, are recorded as "Cracks". Major detachment by this process is also recorded as "Losses".
- Cracking: Narrow fractures of variable length and direction.
- Tilted/Fallen Significantly (more than 15 degrees) out of Sunken: vertical alignment, flat on the ground, or partially buried.
- Open Joints: Missing or defective pointing mortar. (tombs)
- Fragmented: Broken or detached stone where the pieces still exist for reassembly.
- Losses: Absence of original material, as judged by incompleteness of form, decoration, or inscription.
- Other Damage: Mechanical effects, such as lawnmower abrasion and rock creep.
- Previous Repair: Check off appropriate condition.

Reverse of Inventory Form

The Inscription is always copied verbatim from the grave marker, i.e.:

HERE LYES Ye BODY OF Mr PAUL PRATT

not

Here lies the body of Mr. Pratt.

Excavate gently to read any portion of the inscription buried beneath the surface and indicate on form with symbol shown: [WHO DYED MAY 1st 1749 AE.47]

Any information derived from sources other than the grave marker's actual inscription, whether inferred from fragments, or from records found during research, is indicated [within brackets] and the source written on the form.

Inventory Form (cont'd) - Reverse

Remarks: Annotations or unusual circumstances not otherwise covered, i.e., a fragment is buried nearby, rare iconography, etc. This includes Probated, a notation made when research uncovers probate records which link a gravestone and a particular carver, and Signed, another notation, added (rarely) when a carver has signed or initialed his grave marker carving.

DAILY WORK FLOW

An outline of the pre-planned sections and rows is sketched onto a working map of the burying ground. A day's batch consists of between 50 and 100 inventory forms. These are pre-listed; also fill-in the gravestones to be inventoried that day (Location/Ref. No.) under "Identification", compass orientation and note whether or not sunken. This aids in inventorying all the stones without missing those sunken or situated behind other stones.

Once the day's batch of gravestones has been assigned inventory forms, the work consists of sitting down before each grave marker and accurately recording the information on an inventory form. Only black pen, not pencil, should be used to fill out the inventory forms. The forms are held in a three-ring binder to keep them organized, which is especially helpful on breezy days. Other useful equipment: trowel for carefully excavating below-grade inscriptions, a soft paint brush for cleaning any surface deposits that interfere with reading the inscriptions, a 20' tape for measuring and locating stones, and a small mirror to reflect sunlight on shaded inscriptions.

After each day's inventory forms have been completed, they must be rechecked for accurate numerical sequence, map location, complete inscription and for completion of all categories of information. The date should then be entered. The subsequent photographic inventory, preferably with reference number in photo, will record each marker and its identification number; the photographs are then matched to the forms. When the inventory is finished, the forms become part of the permanent collection of data on file, and available to the public, at the Bostonian Society, 15 State Street.
